LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT AND CEO AND STATE HISTORIC PRESERVATION OFFICER

Shortly after the Colorado History Museum faced the wrecking ball, the Longwoods International Study, which examines tourist activity in Colorado, listed it among Denver's most visited attractions. Soon the History Colorado Center will take an even greater place among Colorado's tourist destinations.

"To accomplish great things, we must not only act, but also dream; not only plan, but also believe." Nobel Prize-winning author Anatole France's words describe what surely has been one of the most moving years—literally and figuratively—in the 131-year existence of History Colorado, the Colorado Historical Society.

Today, our museum at 1300 Broadway in Denver is gone. In its place is the memory of a year of unbelievable progress on the part of our staff, volunteers, and partners. The August 2009 groundbreaking of the History Colorado Center at 1200 Broadway initiated an unfathomable collective effort, planning for our new facility while operating and dismantling what had served us for 35 years.

Just prior to closing the Colorado History Museum, in partnership with the Denver Art Museum and Denver Public Library we opened the joint exhibition Allen True's West to unanimous praise. Shortly thereafter, an exhibit of bronze sculptures by internationally renowned sculptor Ed Dwight highlighted Black History Month as we prepared to close our doors.

Dedicated volunteers lent us their extraordinary hands as we continued to offer lectures, tours, and programs. They helped mount the monumental effort to pack and move—18 months ahead of schedule—and organized a sale to recycle leftover props and decorative reproduction items from the old museum, attracting press and a crowd that wrapped around the building.

All along, History Colorado museums and sites throughout the state also dreamt big and made big things happen. The Song of Pueblo production and the reintroduction of steam locomotion to the Georgetown Loop Historic Mining & Railroad Park® brought vitality to our regional museums. The State Historical Fund provided economic development opportunities through its grant program, and the Office of Archaeology and Historic Preservation conducted an archaeological study of our new building's site, teaching us about early Denver and providing a model for urban archaeology efforts. We also worked to address the curricular void created as class time dedicated to social studies dwindled in our schools.

Overall, this year gave us the chance to act, plan, dream, and lay the groundwork for making a positive impact on Colorado through economic development and educational outreach.

At times, the challenges we've faced have been so great, it felt as if we could lose our balance. But we haven't. We continue to dream big dreams, knowing that we will make a profound difference in our state's future.

Edward C. Nichols

LETTER FROM THE CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Anyone who has ever moved knows it can be an experience. At History Colorado, moving everything—twice—will be no exception. But it will be exceptional: Our change of headquarters to the History Colorado Center is more than a physical move. It is part of a larger cultural effort, giving us another opportunity to look at all our moving parts throughout the state.

As we build this center—the construction of which generates jobs and economic stimulus to the area without drawing from the state’s General Fund—it would be easy to think our attentions are all on Denver. Nothing could be further from the truth. In fact, as we look around, we see what a remarkable effect we have had on the whole state.

A look at the statewide impact of State Historical Fund (SHF) grants is a compelling example. Since the fund’s inception, it has awarded more than $247 million to 3,778 recipients in every one of our 64 counties. The effect of that monetary infusion into local economies is of paramount importance in our ongoing role as stewards of Colorado history.

The real-life economic impact has been determined to be more than 6 to 1—every dollar the state invests in historic preservation through the SHF leverages six dollars. That means SHF and preservation incentive programs have played a more than billion-dollar role in the state’s economy.

Follow historic preservation grant money as it moves around the state; it has provided tens of thousands of jobs from Rangely to Wray, Dolores to Virginia Dale. The dollars pay educators, archaeologists, and electricians, helping pay their mortgages and supporting local shopkeepers and grocery clerks who have kids who go to school and learn about Colorado through History Colorado’s educational resources and programs. Then, when vibrant economies fuel Colorado’s communities—urban, suburban, and rural—counties’ real estate values and sales taxes increase, strengthening the tax base and enhancing the quality of life.

Moreover, Colorado’s exemplary commitment to preserving historic places moves money into the state by supporting heritage tourism, one of our finest and most lucrative industries.

There are endless attempts to improve Colorado’s finances. Keeping an active historic preservation grants program is a proven winner, and the SHF serves the state magnificently.

All History Colorado’s moving parts—including the SHF, our museums, and the Office of Archaeology and Historic Preservation—contribute to our state’s ability to thrive. As we move, we see what we have done, what we do, and what we are capable of doing. This history is our future.

ON THE MOVE

Exhibit specialists, educators, and curators developed an interpretive plan for the new History Colorado Center.

Our guiding tenets:

- *History matters.
We cannot hope to fulfill our responsibilities as citizens or plan for our collective future without an understanding and appreciation of our heritage. History—our history—matters.*
- Colorado is unique—by virtue of its extraordinary landscape and by virtue of the courage, tenacity, and creativity of the people who built and shaped this land.

Since I joined the History Colorado staff two years ago, this organization has been continually on the move with increasing speed and alacrity—no more so than in fiscal year 2010.

Under the guidance of our remarkable collections staff, who marshaled the forces of 70 volunteers and contract workers, 250,000 3-D objects and millions of photographs, documents, books, and manuscripts that together reflect 10,000 years of human habitation moved from the former Colorado History Museum to an off-site warehouse—all in a matter of nine short months. KUSA Channel 9 chronicled this impressive effort in a documentary, “Moving Memories.”

Approximately 110 History Colorado staff members moved, too, to temporary headquarters at 1560 Broadway. For the first time in decades, museum, State Historical Fund, and Office of Archaeology and Historic Preservation staffs are working in the same building, facilitating a more cohesive approach to our shared commitment to preserve the state’s identity. Virtually everyone in the organization participated in articulating the needs our new History Colorado Center must meet—from workspace demands to exhibit gallery ceiling heights to collections storage climate control.

As significant as the physical moves are the ways our approach to audiences, to education, and to programming are expanding and changing. We engaged nationally renowned consultants to help enrich our understanding of audiences through systematic visitor research across broad demographic lines. Working with some of the nation’s best exhibit developers and exhibit and media designers, we are creating exhibits for the History Colorado Center that are immersive, environmental, interactive, and compelling for visitors of all ages. For the first time, we’ve also engaged a well-known advertising agency that will help us build our brand and raise public awareness of our many programs.

As an educational institution, we have a particular responsibility to serve schools throughout Colorado. Our educators guided at-risk children participating in our Old Stories, New Voices program down the pathways of the Civil War during a 10-day trek from Glorieta Pass to Gettysburg. While budget cuts make it increasingly difficult for most students to take field trips, new technologies enable us to bring our programs to even the state’s remotest schools and communities. We are developing ColoradoFieldTrip.org to ensure that every Colorado student is within 50 miles of a History Colorado experience—whether through our regional sites, partnerships with small community organizations, or Web-based programs for teachers and students.

As History Colorado plans the infrastructure, staff, and resources necessary to move ahead swiftly as a vibrant, responsive institution, we are undeniably building our future on the firm foundations of the past.

Kathryn Hill
Chief Operating Officer, History Colorado

PACKING AND TRACKING 10,000 YEARS OF HISTORY

Opened in 1976, the flagship Colorado History Museum closed to the public on March 28, 2010. In April, demolition of the museum and neighboring state judicial department building began. By May, the museum's demolition cleared the way for construction of the Ralph L. Carr Justice Complex on the former museum site.

Several years of planning and preparation culminated in April, when the last cargo pallet was moved out of the museum building, its contents to join the rest of the treasured collections in temporary storage until their new home in the History Colorado Center is complete. The Collections and Library Division accomplished this massive move within a much-shortened time frame, with no documented damage or loss to any of the collection items.

Acceleration of the demolition schedule—done in order to take advantage of record low construction and financing costs—shaved more than a year off the anticipated collections packing and moving schedule and necessitated an interim storage facility. History Colorado staff secured a 52,000-square-foot, climate-controlled warehouse north of downtown Denver, complete with staff workspace.

From August 2009 to April 2010, contract staff and volunteers helped curatorial, collections management, and library staff to pack and track all collections. Professional movers, art handlers, riggers, crate builders, conservators, and even a house mover assisted. The Stephen H. Hart Library closed to the public in October to allow time to pack books, archives, and photography collections. The newspaper microfilm collection was temporarily relocated to the Denver Public Library so researchers could continue to access that important resource.

As the April 30 move deadline approached, packing crews worked two daily shifts and weekends. Project teams rehoused items as they worked through each collection—for example, fabricating custom foam mounts to protect every piece of archaeological pottery during transport. Items were boxed, boxes were palletized, and the location of each pallet tracked from museum to warehouse.

In July 2009, History Colorado received a $150,000 grant from the Institute of Museum and Library Services' Museums for America Program. The goal of the two-year grant project is to gain intellectual and physical control over History Colorado's collection of 3-D objects. Grant funds supported the addition of two temporary full-time collection move assistants, whose efforts have identified undocumented and misidentified collections and have "found" many items lacking current location data. This inventory is the first step in making History Colorado's collections more accessible to the public, ultimately providing online access to all collections.

A HISTORIC MOVE: BY THE NUMBERS

Approximately 30 contract workers and 50 volunteers assisted History Colorado staff in packing and transporting millions of artifacts, photographs, and printed materials to temporary storage, including:

- 195 truckloads containing 1,580 pallets, 279 crates, and 126 oversize boxes holding framed paintings and other large items;
- 5 very large objects such as a sod house and Fritchle automobile, moved by special conveyances;
- approximately 4 tons of books and more than 1.5 miles of manuscript collections.

Buehler Moving & Storage assisted Trammell Crow Company in coordinating and accomplishing the collections and History Colorado office moves. Buehler provided:

- 4 to 30 movers per day, with an average of 8 to 12 movers for more than 70 days—equal to 626 supervisor hours, 3,677 mover hours, and 947 truck hours;
- flatbeds, cranes, rigging, crating, packing, dismantling, demolition, reinstalling, reshelving, and other equipment and services;
- 630 tapeless cartons, 8 cases of shrink-wrap, 150 computer bags, 16 dish packs, 60 library carts, 56 machine carts, 10,000 sticker labels, 130 custom-built pallets, 47 “speed packs,” 100 miscellaneous boxes, and 880 plastic moving totes.

MOVING BEYOND OUR WALLS

While the History Colorado Center is under construction in Denver, History Colorado's network of 10 museums and historic sites continues to reach audiences across the state through educational programs, special events, and up-close encounters with history.

During this fiscal year, the increasingly popular Byers-Evans House Gallery, free days, events, extended hours, and a doubling of school visits drove Byers-Evans House Museum visitorship to a record high. Interior enhancements to the Grant-Humphreys Mansion helped increase the site's rental income significantly.

Fort Vasquez was on pace to double its sales over the previous year with a refreshed gift shop and the introduction of a bartering program that enticed customers to name their price. The fort hosted more than 120 members of the Oregon-California Trails Association in August, increasing History Colorado's national presence.

The popular steam engine #12 was brought back on line at the Georgetown Loop Historic Mining & Railroad Park®, where overall ridership was up 37 percent. The Healy House and Dexter Cabin partnered with five local museums in the "Museums of Leadville Passport" for the 2010 season, bolstering attendance. The Colorado & Southern Railroad offered guided wildflower train rides, followed by lunch on the Healy House lawn and a private museum tour.

In April, expert adobero Manuel Gamboa, a now-retired Trinidad History Museum employee of more than 30 years, repaired and whitewashed three of the Baca House's adobe walls. Grants supported an apprenticeship between Gamboa and John Sousa, a seasonal museum worker. Sousa appreciated learning the age-old craft from Gamboa, recognized regionally for his beautiful adobe work.

Steam engine #12 makes its return to the Georgetown Loop line.

The Byers-Evans House Museum hosted Lincoln in Focus: Original Photographs of the President and the Civil War on the occasion of the 150th anniversary of Lincoln's election as president.

The Mercado is a perennial favorite at El Pueblo History Museum.

El Pueblo History Museum made national news when the New York Post featured Pueblo in its "50 States, 50 Stories" series. At Trinidad History Museum, grounds improvements such as accessible pathways made it easier for visitors to explore the Baca-Bloom Heritage Gardens. Fort Garland Museum director Rick Manzanares assisted the Costilla County Economic Development Council in establishing the Sangre de Cristo Heritage Center at Costilla County in San Luis, Colorado. Pike's Stockade State Monument celebrated its 85th anniversary and completed park improvements.

Finally, the Bear Dance exhibit moved from the former Colorado History Museum to Montrose's Ute Indian Museum, whose gift shop is a premier source for American Indian jewelry and crafts. The exhibit's opening reception coincided with National American Indian Heritage Month.

FRESH PERSPECTIVES ON THE PAST

History Colorado exhibit developers traveled to more than 25 Colorado communities to explore exhibit ideas for the new History Colorado Center and learn what scholars, subject experts, archaeologists, community leaders, businesspeople, museum operators, policymakers, and tribal representatives consider the most important messages in Colorado history. They found that Coloradans are brave and resilient, diverse and resourceful, outdoor-loving and forward-looking; that Coloradans dream big dreams and come together to create vibrant and diverse communities.

Staff lived up to History Colorado's new exhibit development model—"audience first"—by launching four audience research projects. Staff and volunteers engaged with more than 400 patrons of museums, libraries, and coffee shops to examine their knowledge, interest level, and perspectives about History Colorado's exhibit and program concepts.

Based on that research, staff developed a History Colorado Center exhibit plan that will invite audiences to experience Colorado history thematically—by meeting people throughout the state and the places they have built; discovering the landscape that has shaped us and that we have shaped; and exploring the dreams, visions, and folklore that Colorado has always inspired in the people who have come here.

Exhibit developers worked with museum consultant Janet Kamien, exhibit designer Andrew Merriell & Associates, and media producers Chedd-Angier-Lewis to design and execute the exhibits' first phase. Merriell's work includes the National Museum of the American Indian and the North Carolina Museum of Natural Sciences, while Kamien's includes the National Underground Railroad Freedom Center and the Chicago Historical Society. Chedd-Angier-Lewis' work encompasses the creation of the television series NOVA and other programs for PBS and the BBC, as well as media components for more than 150 museums.

From October 2009 through March 2010, History Colorado partnered with the Denver Art Museum and Denver Public Library to host the exhibit Allen True's West—a three-venue extravaganza highlighting the multifaceted career of this Colorado illustrator, fine-art painter, and muralist. The show garnered Best Historic Art Show and praise as "one of those rare win-win-win collaborations" in Westword's annual "Best of Denver" issue.

Last year's Colorado Gold Rush exhibit at Denver International Airport proved so popular that History Colorado is developing two follow-up exhibits for the airport. The first, Tribal Paths: Colorado's American Indians, 1500 to Today, opened at DIA in September 2010 in conjunction with History Colorado's first true Web-based exhibit—both drawing on the expertise of tribal consultants.

This team completed concepts for the History Colorado Center's exhibit galleries, augmented by compelling media experiences including those in its grand atrium. With all new exhibitions and programs in the planning phase, the History Colorado Center is poised to move from collaboratively developed concepts into reality as a prime destination for families, students, tourists, and other visitors of all ages, as well as a community gathering space to spark civic dialogue.

THE STATE HISTORICAL FUND

Richard Florida, author of The Rise of the Creative Class, states in his book The Great Reset: How New Ways of Living and Working Drive Post-Crash Prosperity that three key attributes make people happy in their communities and cause them to develop a solid emotional attachment to the place they live. One of these characteristics is great open spaces, parks, attention to community aesthetic, and the existence of historic buildings. History Colorado's State Historical Fund (SHF) grants program is a prime example of how preservation efforts make such a difference in the quality of life in communities across Colorado.

The constitutional amendment of 1990 authorizing limited-stakes gaming in three Colorado mountain towns established the SHF. The associated legislation allocated a portion of the tax revenue from gaming activities toward SHF grants for historic preservation. In the 18 years of active gaming since that amendment passed, the SHF has awarded more than $247 million in grants—helping public and nonprofit organizations in all 64 Colorado counties preserve thousands of architectural and archaeological treasures.

SHF-funded preservation efforts not only improve the ambiance of our built environment and inspire state pride; they also have the power to transform communities by generating tangible benefits to our economy. A 2005 Colorado Historical Foundation study showed an economic return of $6 for every $1 in grant funds awarded, through preservation jobs, resultant business potential, and the economic boost to local communities.

As a way to strengthen this ability and commitment to Colorado, two special initiatives programs were created this year to direct precious SHF dollars to the most pressing issues facing the Colorado preservation community: sustainability and economic rural development. These special initiatives grants will be awarded during the next fiscal year for preservation projects that clearly demonstrate how they will positively impact economic development in a rural community or enhance and promote environmental sustainability and its inextricable link with historic preservation.

SHF dollars help rural areas and small towns statewide to preserve the cornerstones of their communities. The following are just a few of this year's success stories:

A 1917 newspaper called the new Drennan School east of Colorado Springs "the first community social center to be established in El Paso County," an early indicator of the building's key contributions to the community beyond educating children of ranching and farming families. In addition to providing respite from the sometimes desolate life of prairie homesteaders, the building housed a post office, telephone switchboard, and church. After the school closed in 1955, the loose-knit rural community refused to abandon the building. Alumni acquired the schoolhouse in 1957 for use as a community building. An SHF-funded project rehabilitated and restored the building's shingle-sided exterior to protect the carefully maintained interior, where original windows, doors, trim, flooring, heating systems, chalkboards, desks, and stage curtains are all intact and functional. Listed in the Colorado State Register of Historic Properties and the National Register of Historic Places, the former schoolhouse continues to host a wide range of community get-togethers including an annual “all-school reunion,” which encourages connection to the past not only for the graduates but also for their children and grandchildren.

Listed in the National Register of Historic Places, the WPA-built Jamestown Town Hall is the focal point for community life in this small mountain town northwest of Boulder. Residents assemble here for public meetings, concerts, potluck suppers, and plays. Construction on this simple stone building began in early 1935 with local stonemasons hauling rock from nearby James Creek. The building’s location at the base of a steep incline allowed runoff to wash against the structure, deteriorating its masonry, and the incapacity of the roof structure was starting to overturn the sidewalls.

Jamestown Town Hall demanded stabilization and restoration to survive. The restoration hit some stumbling blocks, including weather delays and the need for additional engineering to assure the SHF that the required structural reinforcement would not negatively impact the interior’s visual appearance. But throughout the course of the project, the mayor, architect, and general contractor persevered, keeping sights on the goal of restoring the historic town hall with patience and good humor.

Situated prominently on tiny Pitkin’s main street, the 1900 Pitkin Town Hall continues its original administrative functions as it hosts local meetings, an annual melodrama, and other town events in its second-floor community room.

Although the town completed some preservation projects on the building in the 1990s, by the early 2000s the building suffered from a weak structure, peeling paint, code issues, and a historically incompatible repointing job. Built into a hillside, the building sustained moisture infiltration and creatures had burrowed into the mortar, with some holes running 12 inches into the stone foundation. Despite financial obstacles, Pitkin resolved to preserve its town hall through fundraising activities such as spaghetti dinners and grants from organizations including the SHF. Restoring the foundation and interior, improving the drainage, reinforcing the second-floor structure, painting the exterior, and replacing the stairs and handicap ramp have revitalized this community hub listed in the State Register of Historic Properties. Residents approved a mill levy tax increase dedicated to the upkeep of Pitkin Town Hall, further illustrating their support for the historic building and commitment to usher it into a vibrant future.

Beyond restoration and rehabilitation of historic buildings, the SHF assists in a wide variety of preservation projects, including architectural assessments, archaeological excavations, designation and interpretation of historic places, preservation planning studies, and education and training programs.

HISTORY COLORADO AWARDS

Named for the Colorado Historical Society's first editor and professional historian, this biennial award goes to the best article or monograph published in History Colorado's scholarly historical series:

2009 LeRoy R. Hafen Award

- Richard Gould
For the monograph The Life and Times of Richard Castro: Bridging a Cultural Divide, published in 2007 as volume 14 of the Colorado History journal

Richard Castro emerged from the early struggles of Denver's Hispanic movement to become one of Colorado's most important political figures. Gould traces Castro's path from the streets of Denver to the chambers of the State Capitol. The volume earned Gould a Colorado Book Award for History/Biography.

These awards are given annually to individuals, organizations, or museums in Colorado municipalities that have made a major contribution during the year to the advancement of Colorado history:

2009 Caroline Bancroft History Award

- The Breckenridge Heritage Alliance
For the Edwin Carter Museum

Occupying a log cabin built circa 1875, the museum originally housed frontier taxidermist Edwin Carter's collections, which became the founding collections of the Denver Museum of Natural History. After extensive renovation, the Carter Museum reopened, featuring fresh exhibits and a new interpretation of Carter's life, work, and significance.

2009 Josephine H. Miles History Award

- Historic Denver, Inc.
For Denver Story Trek

Denver Story Trek lets participants explore the stories behind the city's historic landscapes and landmarks through an interactive, self-guided tour. Participants can bike, walk, or drive to Trek sites and use their cell phones to hear stories about the sites and record their own insights.

Honorable Mentions

- The Historical Society of Idaho Springs
For community engagement and participation in the 150th Colorado Gold Rush Anniversary events
- Candy Hamilton
For researching and compiling an extensive repository of primary sources on the Great Western Sugar Company for her book Footprints in the Sugar: A History of the Great Western Sugar Company

NEW FOUNDATIONS BUILT UPON THE OLD

During site preparation for the new History Colorado Center, archaeological research there reminded everyone at History Colorado how vividly the physical remains of our historic sites tell the stories of those who have gone before. The Office of Archaeology and Historic Preservation (OAH) creatively engages Coloradans in partnerships to discover, preserve, and take pride in our architectural and archaeological resources.

The Information Management Unit provides current, accurate cultural resource information for planning, research, and education. This year it maintained an educational website that received 184,315 hits, as well as COMPASS, an online database of site-specific information; provided scanned information to the Denver Public Library for electronic tours of historic neighborhoods; and worked to upgrade the site database and Geographic Information System.

Students participating in archaeological training through the Program for Avocational Archaeological Certification—a partnership with the Colorado Archaeological Society and Adams State College—completed site forms from a survey in Fremont County. Historical and Architectural Survey Training Initiative students documented houses in Denver’s Washington Park area.

The Office of the State Archaeologist issued 103 permits for archaeological and paleontological work on state lands, while the Preservation Planning Unit engaged the public in developing a draft statewide preservation plan, The Power of Place, to guide preservation efforts for the next decade.

The Intergovernmental Services Unit (ISU) urged communities to develop local preservation programs. For encouraging mountain communities to learn from each other through the Ski Town Forum, ISU Director Dan Corson received an honor award from Colorado Preservation, Inc. ISU also reviewed 3,110 projects for compliance with federal and state preservation law, including special highway, housing, and energy projects funded by the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act.

The Office of the State Archaeologist coordinated and interpreted the excavation of early-20th-century row houses at the History Colorado Center site, where artifacts and intact building foundations yielded abundant evidence for the material culture of urban dwellers. Supplementing the written record, the findings reveal how the block's use changed through time. OAHP staff held free public tours to discuss the discovery process and excavation findings, which provide a better understanding of daily life in early Denver.

CARRYING HISTORY'S LESSONS INTO THE CLASSROOM

As History Colorado transforms physically, its Education Division is transforming programmatically. The division is listening to teachers about what they need from History Colorado and actively creating classroom tools that fit schools' shifting needs.

High-stakes testing is squeezing social studies out of school curricula across our state. The important stories that happened here in Colorado—those with the power to connect to students and change lives—are going untold. To address this crisis, History Colorado took the lead in forming a partnership between social-studies content providers, working together to develop integrated curricula in line with the Colorado Department of Education's new social-studies standards. The same stories told in History Colorado's exhibits will be made into Web-based curricula and outreach programming that local communities' museums and libraries can deliver into classrooms. History Colorado secured $15,000 from U.S. Bank and Xcel for the creation of school outreach programs and developed and pilot-tested its first outreach class.

History Colorado partnered with teachers from both Jeffco Public Schools and the Four Corners region on Teaching American History grants and became part of a grant to work with Denver Public Schools to create lesson plans for grades 3 to 5 based on History Colorado's manuscript collections. For the third year, the National Endowment for the Humanities supplied a grant to bring History Colorado's Old Stories, New Voices intercultural youth program to four states. A grant from the LARRK Foundation enabled History Colorado to develop a yearlong program that offered underserved middle-school students an opportunity to experience Colorado history in a dynamic, engaging, and personal manner; this new partnership with KIPP Sunshine Peak Academy connected kids to their local communities. The unveiling of a new student-created website, My Colorado, My Community, culminated the school year.

History Colorado's artifact kits continue to serve more than 12,000 students statewide, and almost 3,000 students were guided on immersive walking tours of downtown Denver. The organization also kept adult audiences moving with its Tours & Treks program and uncovered "hidden history" during the 2009–2010 Lecture Series, sponsored by the Walter S. Rosenberry III Charitable Trust.

History Colorado is moving to reach every Colorado classroom through Web-based curricula and distance-learning tools, facilitated outreach visits to classrooms, enrichment programming such as Old Stories, New Voices, and relationships with social-studies content providers and community museums.

THE VOLUNTEERS OF HISTORY COLORADO, THE COLORADO HISTORICAL SOCIETY

From reenactments at Fort Garland to leading walking tours in LoDo to packing for the move from the Colorado History Museum, volunteers throughout the state do much of History Colorado's heavy lifting and always give generously of their time. This year 460 active volunteers donated 40,526 hours of service, a contribution valued at $820,621. A major effort for many volunteers was packing and moving History Colorado's collections, for which approximately 50 volunteers in collections management contributed 4,778 hours. The Volunteers also staged a moving sale at the Colorado History Museum, selling ephemera from past exhibitions and eclectic decorative items to benefit History Colorado museum and educational programs.

The Volunteers awarded 13 grants with a value of $12,454 to History Colorado for programs in Denver and the various regional properties. Two main fundraisers brought in a combined $15,171.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

RNL Design

Remembering a Master

When the Colorado Governor's Office announced an architectural competition for a complex incorporating new judicial and state museum buildings in September 1973, it searched for the best Colorado-based architects. The winning competitive entry was by architect John Rogers of RNL Design.

John Rogers passed away July 12, 2010, of complications resulting from a long-term lung disease. He died peacefully after his wife had passed 14 hours earlier.

Leaders in the emerging field of modern architecture, RNL grew from a small local firm into a prominent, internationally known company. Rogers combined modern architecture with inviting, usable spaces, winning numerous awards for his visionary work. His designs were instrumental in shaping the contemporary Denver cityscape.

Rogers' contributions, talent, and vision for the Colorado History Museum and other structures were extraordinary, and his work will forever be appreciated and admired. He graciously gave his time and energy to advise History Colorado on the design of the new History Colorado Center, even as his own design was scheduled for demolition. His input and expertise were truly valued, and we honor his legacy—one that transcended the history of this organization to embrace the development of Denver and beyond.

History Colorado Partners with the Smithsonian

History Colorado enjoyed a new honor in June: acceptance as a Smithsonian Affiliate. As an affiliate, History Colorado will have access to Smithsonian Institution resources including collections; traveling exhibitions, lectures, and study tours; staff expertise in areas of conservation, collections care, and exhibition development; outreach services; scholarship; performing arts; and membership benefits. History Colorado museums will share these resources with local communities statewide.

History Colorado underwent a rigorous application process to become a Smithsonian Affiliate, which included demonstrating how its mission, connection to local communities, and exhibition programs and services coincided with those of the Smithsonian. As an affiliate, History Colorado joins a network of 160 museums and educational and cultural organizations in 40 states.

The year and the move were officially and festively commemorated by a Wrecking Ball Party on the rooftop terrace of the Museum Residences. Co-hosted by History Colorado's volunteers and ROOTS, the event celebrated the organization's past, present, and future; provided a nostalgic view of the Colorado History Museum building on the eve of its demolition; educated 200 partygoers about the new History Colorado Center; and raised about $6,000 to boot.

History Colorado marked Black History Month when board member Doug Morton and his wife, Marilyn Brown, kicked off celebrated sculptor Ed Dwight's Inauguration of Hope exhibit at the Colorado History Museum. More than 400 local legislators and dignitaries, members of History Colorado's African American Advisory Council, and devotees of Dwight's work attended the event.
