Thank You!

One of the best things about a new year is that it brings a welcome opportunity to look back at what you—our generous supporters—have helped us accomplish over the past year. As our state and our world see such rapid change, it's vital that our organization be a catalyst for progress. Using Colorado's unique history, together we can empower a broader audience to help shape the future.

Extending our commitment to telling Colorado's stories in authentic ways, we opened the Center for Colorado Women's History at the Byers-Evans House Museum, held programs for tens of thousands of schoolchildren statewide, and mounted exhibitions like Borderlands of Southern Colorado and Zoom In: The Centennial State in 100 Objects. We awarded grants to fiscally responsible initiatives that preserve the heritage of communities across the state. And through neighborhood memory projects like We Are Colorado, we're adding many more perspectives to the stories we share.

This summer we created Colorado's first State Historian's Council, whose members help us carry the narratives of the state to the forefront. We've expanded our board to increase its breadth of experience and statewide representation. And, we're proud to have added Daniel L. Ritchie, chancellor emeritus of the University of Denver, to spearhead a five-year strategic plan for our museums, education programs, collections, philanthropic outreach, and preservation services.

Read on to see some of what we've accomplished thanks to thoughtful contributors like you—our generous supporters, the citizens of Colorado, the legislature, and our State government officials. As a nonprofit charitable organization and State agency, we rely on your support to make it all happen, and we hope you know how excited we are by the opportunities these partnerships present. We can't do it without you!

- Governor Hickenlooper declared March 21 “Center for Colorado Women’s History Day” with the grand opening of the Center for Colorado Women’s History at the Byers-Evans House Museum. The center focuses on scholarship, programs, lectures, and exhibits that expand the collective knowledge of the history of women in Colorado.

And in a Saturday series, families explored history, art, and culture through activities and live performances in the exhibits.

- The Bruja Brew Fest brought Colorado craft brewers and cider makers to the gardens and placita of El Pueblo History Museum, with proceeds benefiting the museum’s education programs.
- The Program for Avocational Archaeological Certification, offered by the Colorado Archaeological Society and our Office of the State Archaeologist, made archaeology more accessible to Colorado citizens.
- The Ute Indian Museum Lecture Series featured insights into conservation, treaties, and public land use from tribal perspectives.

- Staff finished relocating all offsite artifact collection storage to Denver so items can be better cared for and made accessible for research and use.
- The History Colorado Center provided Saturday Low-Sensory Mornings to families who prefer a lower-sensory museum environment, with attendance limited and sounds turned down.
- A San Luis Valley Day partnership with the Fort Garland Museum & Cultural Center bused valley residents to El Pueblo History Museum to see the Borderlands of Southern Colorado exhibit, attend a lecture, and enjoy a day of activities and entertainment.
- Representatives of the Northern Arapaho, Northern Cheyenne, and Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes of Oklahoma viewed 150 Sand Creek Massacre artifacts in an ongoing tribal consultation toward a future exhibition.
- Staff hosted a Curation Alliance Forum for more than 35 museum, local, and State agency participants who hold or would like to hold State archaeological or paleontological collections.
- History Colorado has a balanced budget and continued revenue growth this year. Attendance is up from previous years, and for a third consecutive fiscal year there have been no audit findings.
