Colorado State Forest Service Funding

The Colorado State Forest Service delivers a diverse range of programs and services using a mix of state and federal funding. State funds are self-generated, appropriated from the state general fund, or authorized specifically to the CSFS through the passage of legislation. Federal funds are attached to specific requirements established by Congress. Several federal grants and cost-share programs, and a state grant program, allow funds to pass through the CSFS to private landowners and other non-federal entities to implement forest management and wildfire mitigation projects that improve forest health and protect human lives, communities, and natural resources.

Colorado State Forest Service

History of the Colorado State Forest Service

In 1955, the Colorado General Assembly officially established the State Forest Service as a division of the Colorado State College of Agricultural and Mechanic Arts - the precursor to Colorado State University. A decade later, legislators expanded the agency's responsibilities and designated the CSFS as the state entity to "provide for the protection of forest resources of the state from fire, insects and disease" and to educate private forest landowners in management techniques. At the time of the expansion, the CSFS operated on a budget of $392,000 with six district field offices and a state office.

Currently, the CSFS consists of 150 permanent employees, 17 district offices and a budget of more than $29 million. The agency delivers a wide range of programs including Forest Management, Wildland Fire Management, Urban and Community Forestry, and Outreach and Conservation Education. The agency also provides staff support to the Division of Forestry in the Colorado Department of Natural Resources, per legislation passed in 2000.

The Colorado State Forest Service, an outreach agency of the Warner College of Natural Resources at CSU, is one of only five state forestry organizations in the nation that is affiliated with a university. That affiliation, and the expertise and dedication of CSFS employees, makes the CSFS the lead state agency for forestry and wildland fire expertise in Colorado.

Critical Current Issues

Forest Condition

Over the past two decades, Colorado's forests have experienced dramatic change. In recent years, several large-scale insect infestations - from Ips beetles in the piñon pine forests of southern Colorado to mountain pine beetles in northern lodgepole pine forests. In both cases, the infestations already have, or will, result in tree mortality rates that exceed 90 percent. In addition, sudden aspen decline, or SAD, affected more than 540,000 acres in 2008, increasing from 334,000 acres in 2007. Spruce beetle is shaping up to be the next statewide forest insect challenge, and outbreaks are expanding in many locations throughout the state. The presence of western balsam beetle and root diseases, which are native to subalpine fir forests, also have increased during the past two decades. As well, such threats as thousand cankers disease in urban and community forests are on the rise, and tamarisk and other invasive species threaten Colorado's riparian forests. The proximity of people, homes, and communities to these large-scale events necessitates rapid response and protection. The challenge is to prioritize where, when, and how to apply treatments to reduce risks to communities and promote ecological resiliency.

Wildland Fire and the Wildland-Urban Interface

The dramatic increase in Colorado's wildland-fire activity precipitated an equally dramatic rise in the fire-related responsibilities and program emphases of the Colorado State Forest Service. Currently, more than 1 million people reside in Colorado's high-risk wildland-urban interface (WUI). This is the area where humans and their development meet or intermix with wildland fuels. Those who live in the WUI present additional challenges related to public protection and land management. Protecting these areas and the people who live there from wildland fire requires individual responsibility and interagency coordination in the areas of wildfire fire prevention, mitigation, preparedness, and suppression.

The Benefits of Colorado's Forests

Colorado's forests provide clean air and water, wildlife habitat, excellent recreational opportunities, wood products, and unsurpassed scenery. These benefits contribute to Colorado's quality of life and are vital to the state's economy. However, without careful management of forest resources, these benefits - and community safety - are at risk.

Addressing Critical Needs

The CSU Connection: Extending Forestry Knowledge to Colorado Citizens

As Colorado's Green University, CSU is committed to investing resources that extend the University's knowledge and expertise about forests and related resources to the state's citizenry. Since 1955, the Colorado State Forest Service has provided landowners and communities with timely, relevant information about forest management, wildland fire, urban and community forestry, and conservation education. In fact, every year, the CSFS helps improve the health of more than 20,000 acres of forest-land, works with more than 400 fire departments, and assists more than 8,500 landowners.

Collaboration and Program Delivery: Protecting Colorado's Forests and Communities

Dramatic fire seasons, warming temperatures, and ongoing bark beetle epidemics have raised unprecedented concern about wildfires and the health of Colorado's forests. As more homes are built in the woods, more people are at risk. Currently, more than 1 million Coloradans live in proximity to 6 million acres of forests at high risk to wildfires.

To help address these issues, the CSFS partners with numerous place-based forestry collaboratives throughout the state and delivers fire mitigation information to hundreds of Colorado residents and communities every year, identifies areas at highest risk of wildfire, helps residents develop Community Wildlife Protection Plans (CWPPs) that prioritize fire mitigation actions, and then helps communities accomplish the work.

Knowledge borne of the social science research conducted by faculty within the WCNR provides valuable insight into the complex social structures and relationships that exist in communities. Such insight is essential in establishing the trust that is vital to the success of wildfire information and mitigation programs that help communities protect themselves from the potential impacts of catastrophic wildfires.

In addition, the Colorado Interagency Cooperative Wildfire Management Agreement with federal land management agencies, County Cooperative Fire Protection Agreement with each of Colorado's 64 counties, Wildfire Emergency Resource Fund, Wildfire Preparedness Fund, and Annual Operating Plans allow for the delivery of programs and coordination across political lines and jurisdictional boundaries.

Working with Other Stakeholders to Protect Colorado's Forest Resources

Recognizing that no single entity has the necessary resources to meet the increasing demand for forestry-related information and expertise, the CSFS participates in several national, regional, state, and multi-county forestry-related organizations including:

- National Association of State Foresters
- Society of American Foresters
- Colorado Forestry Association
- Colorado Tree Farmers
- Colorado Tree Coalition
- Wildland Fire Leadership Council
- Colorado Forest Health Advisory Council
- Front Range Fuels Treatment Partnership
- Front Range Roundtable
- Front Range Watershed Wildfire Protection Working Group
- Colorado Bark Beetle Cooperative
- Northern Front Range Mountain Pine Beetle Working Group
- Natural Resources Outreach Exchange
- Emergency Fire Fund
- Numerous state agencies, including the Colorado Department of Natural Resources, Colorado State Parks, State Land Board, Division of Wildlife, and Conservation Districts
- Numerous federal agencies, including the U.S. Forest Service, Bureau of Land Management, National Park Service, Bureau of Indian Affairs, Federal Emergency Management Agency, and Natural Resources Conservation Districts.

In addition, personnel in the 17 CSFS district offices throughout the state are engaged in partnerships at the local and county levels.

Closer to home, the CSFS supports the activities of the Colorado Forest Restoration Institute and the Center for Collaborative Conservation at CSU. Because the CSFS is affiliated with CSU and remains dedicated to its educational roots, the agency opens doors to students in the Warner College of Natural Resources who want to learn firsthand the skills they will need to become successful land managers and stewards of the land.
